

Top U.S. Defense Chiefs Open Hush-Hush Parley in Quantico

By CHARLES CORDRAY

QUANTICO, Va. (UPI) — U.S. defense chiefs from around the world were cloistered in secret talks today on a wide range of problems such as the ending of U-2 spy flights over Russia, the Japanese riots and a tense cold war road ahead.

Gen. C. P. Cabell, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was scheduled to deliver the opening briefing of the three-day meeting of about 165 civilian and uniformed military leaders. Nothing public was expected to emanate from the closely-guarded meeting until some sort of summary is put out Sunday.

CABELL'S appearance raised prospects that the group would hear a run down on how cancellation of the U-2 flights has changed intelligence-gathering methods.

On another development, Deputy Secretary Thomas S. Gates Jr. said yesterday that the possibility recent violence in Japan might prevent ratification of the new U.S.-Japanese security treaty was "extremely disturbing." Gates noted the Senate seemed entirely favorable to the treaty and it was "important that it be ratified."

Gates took a "walk-on" attitude toward the Senate's $2.1-billion-dollar increase yesterday in the defense budget for the year starting July 1. He said the Quantico conferences would cover generally a long-range look at the needs of the armed forces.

HE ALSO SAID there would be briefings on the international situation and "diplomatic implications."

In a related action, a Senate subcommittee issued a report yesterday in Washington on the handling of U.S. intelligence activities. The group is studying how basic national security policies are formed by the Administration.

The subcommittee said these guidelines should be followed in recommending changes:

- o That intelligence activities are vital to free world survival and amounted to "our first line of defense."

- o Intelligence operations must be subject to higher review and coordination, including "weighing gains against risks."

- o The intelligence operation should be centralized and "to the greatest possible extent anonymous."

- o Diplomacy must be insulated from sensitive intelligence operations which are a source of information only.

- o Public revelation of sensitive intelligence "jeopardizes the normal conduct of foreign relations and compromises the sources."

- o "More can be lost by saying too much, too soon, than by saying too little, too slowly."

Top U.S. Defense Chiefs Open Hush-Hush Parley in Quantico

By CHARLES CORDDRY

QUANTICO, Va. (UPI)—U.S. defense chiefs from around the world were closeted in secret talks today on a wide range of problems such as the ending of U-2 spy flights over Russia, the Japanese riots and a tenuous cold war road ahead.

Gen. C. P. Cabell, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, was scheduled to deliver the opening briefing of the three-day meeting of about 165 civilian and uniformed military leaders. Nothing public was expected to emanate from the closely-guarded meeting until some sort of summary is put out Sunday.

CABELL'S appearance raised prospects that the group would hear a run down on how cancellation of the U-2 flights has changed intelligence-gathering methods.

On another development, Defense Secretary Thomas S. Gates Jr. said yesterday that the possibility recent violence in Japan might prevent ratification of the new U.S.-Japanese security treaty was "extremely disturbing." Gates noted the Senate seemed entirely favorable to the treaty and it was "important that it be ratified."

Gates took a "wait-and-see" attitude toward the Senate's billion-dollar increase yesterday in the defense budget for the year starting July 1. He said the Quantico conferences would cover generally a long-range look at the needs of the armed forces.

HE ALSO SAID there would be briefings on the international situation and "disarmament implications."

In a related action, a Senate subcommittee issued a report yesterday in Washington on the handling of U.S. intelligence activities. The group is studying how basic national security policies are formed by the Administration.

The subcommittee said these guidelines should be followed in recommending changes:

- That intelligence activities are vital to free world survival and amounted to "our first line of defense."

- Intelligence operations must be subject to higher review and coordination, including "weighing gains against risks."

- The intelligence operation should be centralized and "to the greatest possible extent anonymous."

- Diplomacy must be insulated from sensitive intelligence operations which are a source of information only.

- Public revelation of sensitive intelligence "jeopardizes the normal conduct of foreign relations and compromises the sources."

- "More can be lost by saying too much, too soon, than by saying too little, too slowly."